The 3 questions to ask your potential clients to uncover a need they'd pay for

With the below questions, you'll be able to:

- Get people to tell you about their problems in the context of what you could help them with

- Get the criteria of what your product should be able to do for people to pay you for it

- Use the same questions every time to get standardised answers, and be able to organise them so you could spot patterns

Let's go!

QUESTION 1

Set the context

What are your goals right now in the context of [the context where you can help]?

WHY IT WORKS

It situates the person you're speaking with in a context relevant to you.

WITHOUT A CONTEXT

What are your goals right now?

You get the first thing that comes to their mind, and you realise you needed to be more specific to get what you need.

WITH A CONTEXT

What are your goals in the context of your business right now?

The more specific to your business you can get it, the better the answers will be for you later.

EXAMPLES OF CONTEXTS

your health

your fitness

your business

your home environment

QUESTION 2

Find the need

What do you need to [reach this goal(s)]?

WHY IT WORKS

It finds out what people think they need.

Not what they want, what they need.

A WANT

A want is noncommittal.

People want lots of things that they're okay with not having.

A NEED

A need is a pain people will give something up for (like their money) to get met.

WHAT TO DO

Find needs to solve.

And it's easy. You ask, people know what they need and they will tell you.

QUESTION 3

Find the problem

What's been challenging in [getting what you need]?

WHY IT WORKS

A problem is the thing standing in the way of people getting what they need.

Right after a need starts, a potential problem follows. If there isn't a need, logically there can't be a problem to getting it.

OTHER WAYS TO PHRASE IT

What's been stopping you from getting [what you need]?

What's been in your way of [getting what you need]?

Have you tried [getting what you need]?
